Thursday is the Feast of St. George. Little...is known of [George other] than the fact that he suffered death for Christ's sake at Lydda, in Palestine, perhaps about 303, in the persecution under Diocletian. Soon after this date, when peace was given to the Church under Constantine, the memory of the Martyr began to be celebrated, and churches were built under his invocation at Lydda and Constantinople. Thenceforth an extraordinary enthusiasm with regard to him grew up among the faithful, first in all parts of the East, and afterwards in the West... Whence it is apparent that the Crusaders returned to England with great devotion to this Saint whom they had found to be so much venerated in the Holy Land. And at the Synod of Oxford, in 1222, his feast was decreed a lesser holy-day for England, and in 1415 the Constitution of Archbishop Chichele made it one of the chief feasts of the year. Meanwhile King Edward III had founded the Order of the Garter, whereof Saint George hath always been Patron. And just as Edward the Confessor was venerated as the Patron-Saint of England, so George was venerated as the holy Protector thereof. From early times the East had revered him as the Patron of soldiers. As such, many were the marvels attached to his name, and therefore he accounted as one of the Fourteen Holy Helpers ; that is Saints quick to succour in the time of need by their powerful intercession in heaven. As his fame grew, it was said that he was a Christian Knight of Cappadocia, who went far and wide to the succour of the oppressed... The testimony of his undefiled knightly life, whereby he encouraged and protected Christian folk during the cruel and bestial persecution of Diocletian, is made manifest in the allegory of the great, maneating dragon which he is said to have tamed, and caused a little maiden to lead about as a meek beast.
